TIMES ARE CHANGING

How This Affects Your Shop

From low inventory to parts shortages, today's challenges are causing automotive recyclers to adapt to new ways of doing business. BY KELSEY SCHERF

"With consumers wanting to hang on to their cars for longer, shops are seeing a greater variety of issues that need repairing."

It's no secret the past two years have thrown a wrench in multiple industries, requiring a change of viewpoint and skillset. The automotive industry was not able to escape these changes. With rising costs of new cars, we are seeing people hang on to their older cars and recondition them for continued use or resale.

Even with changes in the economy, the demand for cars is still rising. With supply chain issues and a shortage of parts, the supply cannot meet the demand, causing prices to skyrocket. These climbing prices are two-fold. They both incentivize consumers to keep their cars for an extended period of time to avoid paying the inflated prices, or they incentivize consumers to fix up their older cars and sell them at a high profit margin.

Now that we have settled into a new normal in a post-pandemic world, we are able to see how mileage is changing as well. GM is seeing the bulk of miles driven, exceeding other large domestic manufacturers. Not only is GM seeing more mileage than other manufacturers, they are also well over the national average of 13,475 miles. Another trend we are seeing is an increase in mileage on the Ford Escape, averaging almost 17,000 miles per year. Why are we talking an increase in business to your shop.

You may be wondering how you fit into all of this. Let's visit incentive #1 first. With consumers wanting to hang on to their cars for longer, shops are seeing a greater variety of issues that need repairing. A car that may have only needed simple repairs, now has increased mileage that was unexpected. This falls on the shop to have the extended background knowledge of diagnostics to be sure you are repairing the proper issue, and not putting the older car through unnecessary strain. It is also good to have this knowledge so your shop is ready to see the influx of older models and aren't caught off guard when a customer is hoping to get more time out of their vehicle.

There are a lot of assumptions when it comes to diagnosis of a vehicle, especially one that has been on the road for awhile. Making sure your employees have the proper training can help avoid these common assumptions and mistakes. For example, the transmission is not always to blame! It could be brake circuit issues, incorrect tire size, programing issues, and more. Everyone at your shop should know how to look for these issues before wasting precious time and money on solving a problem that doesn't exist.

Now, let's move onto option #2. With the price of cars growing, many are taking advantage of an opportunity for profit for a rebuilt or remanufactured transmission. These are becoming increasingly popular as they can keep costs down, while keeping the car on the road. Both rebuilt and remanufactured transmissions require incredible knowledge of the parts needed and what can be fixed. Does the transmission it need a full manufacturer? This is a question that is continually asked by consumers and automotive professionals alike to be most cost efficient while maximizing resale value.

How can you determine if both scenarios? Automotive training to keep up with the times is incredibly important. A rusty automotive professional is just as bad, or even worse, as a rusty part. Don't have all the knowledge needed yet? No problem, that's where ATSG steps in. Keep your sales team selling with ATSG Transmission Claims Support, now get your first month free! Give us a call at 800-245-7722 or visit atgk.link/rzy to sign up! ¹⁸
